

Abstract Of The Disclosure

A device is provided for detecting a seating position of a passenger in a motor vehicle, the device being characterized in that it outputs at least one instruction to the passenger for adjusting the seat as a function of a signal from a sensory system. The 5 instructions may be output at predefined points in time that minimize a driver's loss of concentration.